PCT IN PRACTICE

Heymanns Verlag Gmbh Nov 2010, 2010. Taschenbuch. Book Condition: Neu. 228x162x20 mm. Neuware - Many recent changes in the PCT are making it an increasingly more attractive option for applicants looking to protect inventions by means of international (PCT) applications. Still a great advantage of the PCT is that applicants are not limited to the 12-month priority period to decide on the States in which to seek patent protection, but instead they can extend this time limit by a further 18 months simply by filing an international application. In addition, the PCT extends even further options which the applicant can avail himself of to get his application searched and undergo a (preliminary) examination right in the international phase. These options allow an applicant to get a good grasp of his potential scope of patent protection right upon entering the national/regional phase. For example, ever since January 1, 2009, in addition to the international search, the PCT has also offered the option of having further (supplementary) international searches carried out so as to better serve the increasing diversity of languages among prior art documents. Particularly when compared to a European (EPC) application, an international (PCT) application has even further advantages, leading increasing numbers of applicants from EPC Contracting States to now favor international applications. One such advantage is that the PCT has no claims fee, so that without paying additional fees, applicants can have more than 15 claims subject to a search and (preliminary) examination in the international phase. This is particularly advantageous for highly-complex inventions which can be claimed in their entirety under the PCT without first being required to unnecessarily limit the application's scope of protection. Another advantage that the PCT provides for is that in cases of non-unity of invention, applicants will be invited to pay additional search...
